Bonjour
Une journaliste de CBC nous demande si nous allons laisser entrer au Canada les membres du groupe polonais « Graveland » qui viennent ce week-end à Montréal.
Selon la journaliste, ils seraient néo-nazis et suprémacistes blancs. En avez-vous entendu parler?

Sur le site du Festival « messe des morts », <http://www.messedesmorts.net/> on confirme leur spectacle samedi 26 novembre au théâtre Plaza de Montréal.

J'ai trouvé ces quelques infos, dont un article du journal de Montréal qui mentionne une manif anti-fasciste ce samedi soir :

Hello,

I am a journalist for CBC Daybreak in Montreal, the morning current affairs radio show.

A band from Poland that is supposed to play in Montreal this weekend is raising concern for some Montrealers.

The band, Graveland, is controversial for its reputation as a "neo-nazi" or "white supremacist" band.

Is Canada Border Services Agency aware of the band's intentions to come to Canada?

Is there a protocol or rules in place from CBSA for allowing performers or people into the country when there is a concern of hate speech or inciting hatred?

My deadline is today at 5 p.m.

Thank you,

Gosselin, Sylvie

Police had to step in to prevent clashes between dozens of pro- and anti-immigration protesters during a rally at the Quebec-New York border Saturday. The far-right groups La Meute and Storm Alliance gathered on Roxham Rd. in Hemmingford to take a symbolic stand against illegal immigration. Since February - when the U.S. government began its crackdown on immigration from Muslim majority countries - hundreds have crossed into Canada illegally through Roxham Rd. Many of them are fleeing violence in Syria. The influx of asylum-seekers has drawn the ire of ultra-nationalist groups like Storm Alliance, whose members banded with La Meute in a show of force on Canada Day. But their demonstration was met with a counter-rally by antifascist protesters. Officers from the Sûreté du Québec and RCMP formed a wall between the groups to prevent violence.
